Bypass opposition hails victory in Freedom of Information case

First Tier Tribunal rules in favour of campaigner's appeal against county council

The campaign fighting against a proposed relief road for Sudbury has hailed an important legal victory, after a tribunal ruled in its favour in an ongoing Freedom of Information (FoI) dispute.

Julian Manyon, member of the Save Our Meadows campaign, appealed to the First Tier Tribunal, arguing Suffolk County Council had failed to fully comply with his FoI request for information relating to the bypass proposal, which he believes will show such a scheme would be ineffective and detrimental.

The Free Press has seen a number of documents released through this request, which opponents say raise questions about the potential impact of a new relief road, although supporters say judgement should be re-will produce more evidence of how pointless and damaging a western bypass would be.

"Overall, we expect that the case will produce further important evidence for the Save Our Meadows campaign, which is supported by increasing numbers of people in and around Sudbury.

"We would like to thank everyone who has supported us through this process, and we appeal to Suffolk County Council to stop wasting public money on solicitors and release all the information it holds."

In its ruling, the council has been told to release any remaining documents relating to WSP, the consultancy that carried out preliminary research into the benefits and drawbacks of a potential Sudbury bypass.

Last month, the Free Press reported that an environmental assessment by WSP from 2017, released under this FoI request, had stated the negative effects of a relief
